Junior Gold Miners Create Millionaires
Invest in the Early Stage

Investing in Gold Mining stock while the company is in its early stage of mining is a strategy many savvy and seasoned investors use to maximize returns and create wealth. During the early stages, small mining company stock is undervalued. The mine reserves are usually at their low levels and the company continues to research and confirm larger deposits at the same site adding to the size of its reserves. As the reserves grow, the stock price tends to rise and larger mining companies and institutional investors pay more interest to the company’s growing reserves. The larger gold mining company makes a bid for the smaller company creating a large rise in the stock price and creating added value for the existing shareholders. The result is the creation of high returns, creating Wealth for the investor.

The above chart tracks gold from its $373 dollar as ounce price in 1975 to its $1400 an ounce in 2013. Given the rise in gold investors cannot afford to ignore gold as a component of their portfolio.
Gold in Your Portfolio

Investors should hold at least 5 to 10% of their portfolio in precious metals — gold and silver bullion and coins and mining stocks. Tangible wealth, not subject to confiscation, registration, or unwarranted intrusion by government, should be a core component of any well-balanced portfolio.

Gold is the ultimate hedge currency for global instability and relief from inflationary pressures.

GOLD, RELIEF FROM DEBT BOMB

The Western world is facing unprecedented levels of sovereign debt. The worst of them — including Greece, Spain, Iceland, the UK, and the US — have funded and unfunded liabilities greater than the yearly output of their entire economies. Governments around the world have assumed debts and made promises they simply cannot afford.

When the major banks faced bankruptcy in 2008, Washington bailed them out; but we have yet to see what happens when Washington itself faces bankruptcy. Rather than default, or "restructure" its debt, I believe the United States will take the politically less painful way out. It will simply print more and more dollars, and pay back its bonds with cheaper dollars, until its creditors receive the nominal value printed on the front of their bonds. This does not erase the debt, but rather pays it back by stealing purchasing power from every investor, worker, and saver with dollar-denominated assets. This is called inflation. The worst part is that nearly every wealthy Western country in the world is mired in debt, and everyone is devaluing its currency along with the US. It’s a race to the bottom, and many conservative investors feel there is no safe place to turn. But history provides us with a safe haven from all government paper — gold. (Euro Pacific)
